

NOAH OBRADOVIC TRANSCRIPT

I am currently a student at Victoria Law school, a final year law student. I am also a 2012 graduate at the law firm Blake Dawson.

I've always enjoyed commercial law - I've loved the energy of commercial law, I've loved the client focus of commercial law. It's always been something that I have been interested in and to a large extent it's why I chose Victoria Law School.

Being in the heart of the Melbourne CBD means that you're around financial districts. Being able to walk into a court, being able to view barristers present their submissions in court - it's a very unique experience. It really allows you to contextualise what you're learning in class into a really practical experience.

You not only form relationships with lawyers and barristers, but the wider professional community which does include bankers and other professionals. And being in the heart of the CBD means that you're exposed to family law firms, you're exposed to criminal law firms, you're exposed to the Vic Bar. You really do get that breadth of exposure.

Being able to work and being able to study at the same time has always been very important to me. So I work part time at a law firm which means that I'm able to walk into the office and then catch a lecture in the afternoon. That's what being in the CBD allows you to do.

Partners can teach me a lot of things. I think as a junior lawyer I can also help teach the partners a lot of thing too and technology is one of those areas.

Victoria University has given me the resources and the facilities to really achieve my goals and the skills, the experiences, the facilities that Victoria Law School has provided has really assisted me in achieving that goal of becoming a corporate lawyer.
