The PhD candidate will work on a project funded through the ARC-funded study, ‘Participation versus performance: managing (dis)ability, gender and cultural diversity in junior sport’. This is an interdisciplinary mixed methods study that examines whether, and if so how, junior sports clubs manage a need to be successful alongside providing an inclusive environment welcoming people of all backgrounds and abilities.

The study aims to develop guidelines that junior sport organisations may use to inform their decision-making and practices in this area. Data collection for the ARC project will involve in-depth interviews, a survey, social network analysis, participant observation and policy analysis.

The ARC study is being carried out through Victoria University in collaboration with Swinburne University of Technology, Monash University and Curtin University. The industry partner organisations collaborating on the project are VicHealth, the Australian Football League and Centre for Multicultural Youth.

The study is being funded through the ARC Linkage Project Grants. The PhD student will be based at Victoria University, Footscray Park Campus. The position will require travel to research sites (junior sports clubs) in metropolitan Melbourne.

Candidate Requirements

Applicants will have an excellent academic track record with a bachelor's degree with First Class Honours in Sociology, Anthropology, Social Work, Sport Management or a cognate discipline or a Master's degree with a research component in Sociology, Anthropology, Social Work, Sport Management or cognate discipline. Applicants will be considered provided they fulfill the criteria for PhD admission and scholarship of Victoria University and demonstrate excellent research capacity.

Remuneration

We offer a stipend to the value of $24,653 per year (plus research support) for three years (March 2014-March 2017).

Application Submissions

Please send your CV, full academic track record and a synopsis of your research experience with your completed application form to researchscholarships@vu.edu.au by 3 February 2014.

For more details about the project please contact Associate Professor Ramón Spaaij (ramon.spaaij@vu.edu.au).
